These days, many people enjoy posting photos and videos on the internet, and many others like watching them. You may want to share your own photos or videos, too. However, before you post, there are some important things to remember.

First, if you share your photos or videos, anyone in the world can see them. You should be careful about sharing personal information, such as your real name, address, phone number, or school. Showing your face online can also be a risk because there are dangerous people who might try to find you and cause trouble. Your photos include small clues that can help them. Also, if your video shows other people's information, it can cause problems for them. You need to think about how your actions might affect others. Always respect their privacy and rights.

Second, pictures, music, or videos you find online are made by someone else. If you want to use them in your posts, you need permission. Works protected by copyright cannot be used without permission. Using copyrighted works without permission could cause legal trouble. Instead, try using free materials or make your own videos and pictures.

Finally, "likes" and "views" do not show how good you are. Your personality is more important than how many likes or comments you get. Some people try to do dangerous things to get more attention than others. But some have been hurt or even lost their lives making risky videos. Some have become frustrated because they only think about the number of views. You don't need to do dangerous things just to get likes. It's more important to be safe and make people happy.

In closing, sharing on the internet can be fun, but you should think carefully before sharing. When your post is online, you can't control who sees it or how it is used. Be smart, stay safe, and take responsibility.
